Dear Visitor,

Thank you very much for visiting my site. It's been fun making it.

I've been working on-and-off on this site for over two years. When I find the time, I like to try and learn about website building. Although there isn't very much right now, maybe someday I might make something interesting for you to experience.

I am very grateful for the existence of Zero Net. Without it, I probably wouldn't know as much about computers and the Internet as I do today.

Now more than ever it is becoming clear that businesses and corporations have changed the landscape of the regular Internet. Today, personal websites are abandoned in favour of data-harvesting social media platforms. Expert-designed business websites discourage the hobbyist from creating their own. Painstakingly-created content does not appear on search engines without money changing hands.

Luckily, the peer-to-peer technology that Zero Net uses enables silly personal project websites like my own to continue to survive.

I hope you enjoy my little corner of the Internet. Please come back soon, for I probably will be updating it more over the winter.

Warm wishes for a happy holiday season,

Chocodum
